

Festival of Flight

Saturday, October 7, 2006 8AM–2 PM
Navy Pier Chicago

The Dorothy Jemison Foundation for Excellence in conjunction with the Chicago Science Expedition: Two Weeks Worth of Wow brings to life the adventure, thrills and many dimensions of aviation and aerospace. As part of the Foundation's Reality Leads Fantasy-Celebrating Women of Color in Flight, we invite you to join the changing face and future of exploring the heavens.

This singular event, open to the public, offers adults and children adventure of interactive displays, games, static aircraft displays, as well as opportunities to meet pioneers in the field.

The First 500 families to arrive will receive a picture book on aviation and space courtesy of the world's largest children's publishing company Scholastic, Inc.

◆
Experience the excitement of NASA International Space Station Simulators; the intensity of Department of Defense military aircraft simulation. Build your own parachute. Test your skills in air vehicle design. Take photos with the past, present and future pioneers of aerospace. And much, much more!

Meet some of the world's leading pioneers in flight including astronauts, pilots – military and commercial— members of the Tuskegee Airmen, the Ninety-Nines, mechanics, scientists, meteorologists, air traffic controllers...

◆
Learn about the many opportunities offered in aviation and aerospace and how to attain them.

◆
Celebrate how women of color pushed the limits of altitude and courage. How Bessie Coleman, Hazel “Ying” Lee, Kalpana Chawla, Nichelle Nichols, Katherine Cheung, Mae Jemison, Vernice Armour, Meryll David, and many other women scientists, pilots, engineers, technicians, and as builders of our imagination changed how we fly.
